Police Say Maggie Reilly Killed Herself, but Her Brother Has a Clue.

SISTER FEARED THE DARK.

She Never Would Have Put the Lamp Out, as It Was Found, He Declares.

STRANGLER MUST HAVE DONE IT.

Detectives and the Coroner Incline to the Suicide Theory—Murphy Exonerated, and Bailed as a Witness.

The police, Coroner Tutill and a majority of the detectives who have been at work on the strange death of Maggie Reilly, better known as "Diamond Flossie," who Bartholomew Gedney, the Oldest Man in Westchester, Who is Seriously Ill.

THE report that Bartholomew Gedney, the oldest resident of Westchester County, and one of the most prominent residents of White Plains, is seriously ill at his home, Godfrey Hall, at White Plains village, has caused much alarm among his many friends. He was somewhat better on Friday morning, but grew weaker toward night. Mr. Gedney is in his ninety-eighth year, and until a short time ago was very active. Two weeks ago he visited J. T. Lockwood's undertaking office and made arrangements for his funeral. He ordered a solid oak coffin and told how he wanted to be laid out. He also named his pallbearers. "I know I want very long," he said. "I like a piece of machinery, the cogs of which have worn to the last and soon all motion will cease."

Mr. Gedney was born in Gedney Hall, where he now resides. From his youth his life has been spent in absolute temperance. He never smoked. He has always been in the habit of getting up at 4 o'clock in the morning and working about his farm. Mr. Gedney has voted for every Republican President, his first vote being cast for John Quincy Adams. He received President Harrison during his visit at White Plains as guest of Whitelaw Reid.

was found Thursday morning at 1:30 o'clock strangled in her flat at No. 228 West Twenty-fourth street, came to the conclusion yesterday afternoon that it was a clear case of suicide.

They account for the disappearance of the jewels which were seen upon her earlier in the evening by surmising that they must have been stolen from her shortly before the so-called suicide, and that the loss led her to hang herself from the bedpost where she was found by her common-law husband, Fred Murphy.

Murphy was exonerated yesterday by Coroner Tutill, who gave him a private hearing. The detective who was called upon for every moment of the time which ensued between 1:07 a. m. and the moment he called the police and informed them that Maggie had been strangled, was called from Martin & Argo's saloon at No. 108 West Twenty-ninth street in the company of "Bill" Rice, seemed to satisfy the Coroner that he could not possibly have committed the crime and notified the officers in that sense of time.

Held Temporarily as a Witness.
Murphy was held for a time at the House of Detention as a possible witness. His bail was fixed at $100.

The strongest evidence against the theory of suicide comes from Joseph Reilly, a brother of Maggie, who came down from Albany yesterday. As soon as he arrived in New York he went to the Twentieth Precinct and requested to be taken to the flat formerly occupied by his sister, and Detective Devine and a Journal reporter accompanied him to the woman's former home.

Young Reilly passed through all the rooms, handled the clothing, looked inquisitively at the furniture and then sat down as though overcome. In the course of the conversation which followed Reilly appeared to be much engrossed.

"I am strongly inclined to the belief," said Devine, "that it was a case of suicide. This top rug and the rug under it at the side of her bed were undisturbed, which would have been a difficult thing for a man to have committed such a crime without some little struggle. There was no sign of any such thing, and we have searched the room from end to end for some clue pointing to murder. The rope was tightly drawn, but she could have accomplished the work by sitting on the edge of the bed, then the bedpost and sinking it in on the floor, permitting the weight of the body to do the rest."

The Brother's Clue.
"What came of the diamonds?" was asked Devine.

"Perhaps it was the loss or theft of the diamonds earlier in the evening that prompted her to the act."

"How do you account for the lower lock being open and only the upper Yale lock being closed on the dining room door? That is not her custom when she was in, as I am going to the party the result of an excitement preceding the suicide. May have been an accident."

"The lights out?" was the next question asked Detective Devine by the Journal man.

Before the detective could answer the question young Reilly found his voice, and, half rising from his chair, remarked with emphasis:

"If that light was out she did not commit suicide. She never slept in a dark room, nor would she stay in a dark room from her earliest childhood. It would have been impossible to keep her here unless the lamp was lit. She would not have stayed in her room under those circumstances any more than I would walk out of the front window. It looks like a case of murder. The man who strangled her passed through the dining room door after unlocking the lower lock, and either turned or blew out the lamp before going down stairs. I cannot agree with the suicide theory if the lamp was not lighted."

Beyond that Mr. Reilly had very little to say and departed soon after in search of an undertaker to take charge of the remains, which are now at the Morgue.

There are still some important points that are not clear to the police. There is the matter of the jewels, which "Diamond Flossie" and Ida Carr, who were charged with picking the pockets of one William Bishop on the night of March 25 at No. 226 West Twenty-sixth street. On the 26th of March, or the following morning, the money—$100—was returned, and Bishop withdrew the charge.

Detectives Perkins worked hard last night trying to locate Bishop, but at a late hour had not found him. On the night of March 25, about 10 o'clock last night Murphy's mother called him from the House of Detention.

Mrs. Antoinette Bach's flat is on the first floor front of the building at No. 159 East One Hundred and Twenty-second street. Albert Bach, her husband, is a German bartender, who has not been known to work for many months. Antoinette is a tall, splendidly developed woman of thirty-five years, well dressed, and reputed to possess money and valuable jewels.

Bach was not in the flat when some unknown man nearly killed Antoinette Thursday. He had gone out about noon to a neighboring saloon, which he was in the habit of visiting.

It was just about noon Thursday that Mrs. Bertha Hink, who occupies the flat across the hall from the one occupied by the Bachs, heard a woman screaming in her neighbor's apartment. She knew that Albert Bach had recently left the house and she had seen no one enter after him.

Mrs. Bach's front door opens on the hallway directly opposite that of Mrs. Hink. It is not far from the hall door which furnishes the only avenue of ingress and egress to the flat building.

"I ran back to my kitchen," said Mrs. Hink, "and through the kitchen door I saw Mrs. Bach lying on the floor, unconscious and bleeding from several wounds in her head. I ran out and called for help, and the door and met Mr. Bach just coming in."

Bach called in Police Officer Hogan, of the East One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Street Station, and sent for Dr. W. Percy Miles, of No. 2002 Lexington avenue.

The police officer and Bach made a hurried search of the flat. The front door was locked, the back door wide open. The rug in the parlor and the carpet just within the portiere-covered archway leading to the bedroom were drenched in blood.

On the floor lay a pocketbook which had been on the dresser. It had contained a dollar or two, Bach said. When found it was empty. In a large chest of drawers, a wardrobe standing alongside the dresser was an open box containing $30 in bills and some $200 worth of jewelry. It was untouched.

Dr. Miles came in a few moments. He found Mrs. Bach, half-dressed, as she had been when Mr. Hink first discovered her. There were three or four jagged cuts upon her head and neck, from which the blood flowed freely. There were also marks upon her neck and throat showing the grip of muscular fingers.

Under the ministrations of the doctors the woman presently recovered consciousness, for a few minutes. She was excited and hysterical. In a semi-coherent manner she said in German:

"I was dressing in the bedroom, when I felt somebody seize me by the throat. It was a tall man with a black mustache. I fought and struggled; then I remember no more."

Any further statement or description of her assailant Mrs. Bach was unable to give. She relapsed into a semi-comatose state under the influence of sedatives administered by the physician, and when the effect of the drugs had worn off she seemed unable to talk by reason of partial paralysis of the muscles of her throat.

In a china cupboard, near which the woman's head had fallen when she was strangled down, the police discovered a broken iron can opener. It was stained with blood, and is evidently the instrument with which the cuts on the woman's head were inflicted.

The police officers entreated Bach rigidly. His explanation was satisfactory.

Late Thursday night, says Bach, Antoinette was sitting at her dressing table for paper and pencil. On a pad handed her she wrote with her left hand, backward, after the fashion of some left-handed, clogographers, in English text, this word:

"Hobbs."

Three separate times she scribbled it upon the pad of paper, and Bach saved the pad and showed it to the police yesterday. Who or what "Hobbs" is Bach says he does not know; certainly the police do not; and Mrs. Hink does not.

CRASH AT A FUNERAL.

Two Carriages Meet in Collision, Injuring Five of the Mourners, One Fatally.

While seven carriages containing the members of a funeral party were on their way home to Bond Brook, N. J., from Milltown, the horses attached to one of the carriages became frightened and ran madly into the carriage in front, throwing out the occupants of both vehicles and badly injuring these five persons: Mrs. Frank Vreeland, badly hurt internally, cut about the head, neck and face; Mrs. Calvin Haglund, death wounds; Mrs. J. C. McGinnis, death wounds; and Mrs. J. C. McGinnis, death wounds.

The driver of the carriage, leg broken, carried the body to Elks' Hall. "Birchy" was moody, and although hungry from her long fast—she had eaten nothing since her master's death on Tuesday—refused to eat the food offered to her.

Mercedes Webster, the six-year-old daughter of the comedian, George Webster, came to the house with her mother in the morning, and seeing "Birchy" disconsolate, tried to cheer her up. She patted the dog on the head and stroked her bridle coat, but "Birchy" would not be consoled. Then Mercedes made some paper wads and began to throw them playfully at the dog.

"Look out, Mercy," cried Mrs. Birch. The warning came too late. "Birchy" sprang at the little girl's throat, and both fell to the floor. Scarcely savagely the dog snapped at the child's face and tried to fasten her fangs in the flesh.

When "Birchy" was dragged away it was found that Mercedes had been bitten on the right cheek near the eyes and on the chin in two places. The little girl was badly frightened and deeply grieved by the unusual conduct of the dog, which has been the companion of her family for several months. The wounds were cauterized by a physician, who says they will leave no permanent marks.

Arthur Moreland, a comedian of the Moreland and Hart company, delivered an eulogy over the body of the dead minstrel at Elks Hall. John W. Myers sang "Calvary" and the Clipper Quartet sang "The Vacant Chair" and "Rock of Ages."

A GRANT STAND FREE.

The EVENING JOURNAL will provide a stand free at the Grant Memorial ceremonies at the West End Drive, Riverside Park, north of the Tomb. Any of those who have not yet received tickets should apply to the office of the EVENING JOURNAL before noon on Monday.

The stand will be extended to children between the ages of nine and fifteen years. It would be well if some caretaker, showing that they are descendants of General Grant's old soldiers is brought with them.
